Torrance

When you were a boy didn't it just tickle you pink to "fish" on the bank of a stream or pond or the pipe where the dishwasher left the house! — oh, anywhere—no matter whether there was a hook on the line or any fish in the water? It's sport, ANYWAY.

But most of all you wanted clothes that you didn't have to think a lot about. Clothes that would stand all the splashing and scratchin' and climbin' around and still come back whole, because if they didn't you knew what you'd get!

We gather here in memory found Of one we loved; that has passed away

To a brighter spot in the great beyond

Where we'll merge and mingle another day.

Let our hearts be loyal to his that is gone

An onward Life's pathway we tread.

Each year let our thoughts as we gather, to mourn,

Grow more sincere as we honor our dead. —ACKLEY.
